PEARSON TO ACQUIRE WALL STREET
ENGLISH: TAKES LEADING POSITION IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE EDUCATION IN CHINA

Pearson, the international education and information company, today announces the acquisition, for $145m in cash, of Wall Street English from parent company Wall Street Institute, which is majority-owned by global private equity firm The Carlyle Group.

Wall Street English is

China

's leading provider of premium English language training to adults. Launched in 2000, it teaches approximately 35,000 students at 39 company-owned training centers in seven cities including

Beijing

Shanghai

Guangzhou

and Shenzhen. It provides English language instruction and practice to university students and professionals - paid for either by the individual or their employer - through a blend of computer-based learning and face-to-face tutorials.

Between 2006 and 2008 it achieved compound annual revenue growth of more than 40%, and expects to generate approximately $70m in sales this year.

Pearson entered the English language training market in

China

in 2008 through the acquisitions of

Learning

Education

Center

and Dellenglish, which focus on school and college-aged students as well as adults. There are now 27 Pearson-owned training centers in and

Beijing

Shanghai

, operating under the Longman Schools brand and drawing on Pearson's global English language training materials and digital learning programmes.

The combination of

Longman

Schools

and Wall Street English gives Pearson a leading position in the English language teaching market in

China

, serving students from elementary school to professional levels. It makes Pearson

China

's second-largest private language training company by revenues, based on Pearson estimates, and takes Pearson's annual education sales in

China

(excluding

Hong Kong

) to more than $100m. Pearson expects English language teaching in to remain a good growth market, despite the global economic downturn, driven by powerful trends including the growth and globalisation of the Chinese economy, high levels of private spending on education and the importance of English language skills to careers and earning prospects.

Following the acquisition, Pearson intends to combine

Longman

Schools

and Wall Street English into one business with shared marketing, advertising, customer support, technology and back office services. It will integrate Pearson's content, assessment and technology into the Wall Street English instructional process, and retain the Wall Street English brand, which has high recognition and a strong reputation in its key markets. Pearson plans to invest to open new Wall Street English training centers in additional cities across

China

, and to use the Wall Street English network and capabilities as a platform for expanding Pearson's wider professional education businesses. Pearson expects the acquisition to enhance adjusted earnings per share in 2010, its first full year, and to enhance adjusted EPS and generate a return above Pearson

's cost of capital from 2011.

John Fallon, chief executive of Pearson's International Education business, said:

"There will soon be two billion people speaking English around the world, and China is absolutely central to our plans to build on Pearson's position as the world's leading provider of English language teaching services. Wall Street English is a successful company with high-quality educational programmes, strong management, a premium brand, good cash flow and margins, and excellent growth prospects. It will be able to draw on the full range of Pearson's assets and resources to do even more to help China's young professionals acquire the skills they need to progress in their lives and careers. It also helps to establish Pearson as a major player in one of the most exciting and dynamic education markets anywhere in the world."
