Nokia and Samsung USITC Litigation Update.

On April 17, 2008, InterDigital Communications, LLC and InterDigital Technology Corporation ("InterDigital") moved to separate the previously consolidated investigations in the United States International Trade Commission ("USITC") against Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd and certain of its affiliates ("Samsung") and Nokia Corporation and Nokia, Inc. ("Nokia"). The Samsung investigation (Investigation No. 337-TA-601 or the "601 Investigation") was consolidated with Nokia's investigation (Investigation No. 337-TA-613 or the "613 Investigation") at the request of Nokia and Samsung, so that InterDigital's infringement claims against Samsung and Nokia would proceed together in the consolidated 613 Investigation. Both Samsung and Nokia opposed InterDigital's motion to separate.

InterDigital filed the motion to separate as a result of an order by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York ("SDNY Court") on March 20, 2008. That order preliminarily enjoined InterDigital from proceeding against Nokia in the consolidated 613 Investigation pending arbitration of Nokia's alleged entitlement to a license under the patents asserted against Nokia in the 613 Investigation, and also required InterDigital to file a motion to stay the 613 Investigation with respect to Nokia. On April 14, 2008, the Administrative Law Judge in the 613 Investigation ordered that the date for the commencement of the evidentiary hearing, originally scheduled for April 21, 2008, be suspended until further notice.

On May 16, 2008, the Administrative Law Judge issued an order finding no reason to further delay the investigation against Samsung, and directing that the investigations against Samsung and Nokia be separated and that the 601 Investigation against Samsung proceed with an evidentiary hearing scheduled for July 8, 9, 10, 11 and 14 (if necessary). The Administrative Law Judge has not yet issued any order regarding the target dates or final determination deadlines in either the 601 or 613 Investigations, although InterDigital expects those dates to be re-set in light of the new procedural posture of the investigations.

The Administrative Law Judge further ordered that the 613 Investigation against Nokia be stayed until either: (a) an appellate court reverses the SDNY Court's decision to issue a preliminary injunction, or (b) absent a reversal of the injunction, an arbitration panel rules that Nokia does not have a license to the asserted patents or a right to have the license issue decided by an arbitration panel.
